Kinesiology, Youth Sport and Athletic Welfare
West London, United Kingdom | June 2018

Kinesiology 499 is designed for Kinesiology students with an interest in physical activity and sport. Brunel University faculty will teach course content from the Centre for Youth Sport and Athletic Welfare in the School of Sport and Education.

This two-week summer abroad experience in England will focus on the British approach to physical activity, physical fitness, and sport, gaining knowledge from past and current norms and traditions. Students will hear lectures from experts in physical activity, fitness, sports, and the Olympic games and visit the 2012 Olympic sites in London. Additional excursions will be planned to other universities, sport facilities, commercial and community fitness facilities, “football” stadiums, sport museums, historical sites, rugby clubs/matches, and local school systems.

The approximate cost is $1,895 (includes lodging, most meals and program-related travel on site). Students are responsible for tuition costs, personal expenses, and travel to and from London.

Led by Dr. Alison Weimer, Health & Physical Education Program Director
